

TELL YOUR UNIQUE
Love STORY...

Our stories are all unique. Common threads may connect us but how those threads are joined together is always a little different. They say love is the greatest story of all time and love is certainly an amazing story worth celebrating.

Your wedding is a time for you to tell your story - to share your passion and love with your family and friends. Your day should be a reflection of your personality and the journey you have taken as a couple.

My role is to listen to your story, to understand it and interpret it in a way that can then be experienced by everyone. I have put these questions together so that you can start thinking about what makes your story special and what moments of your journey together are the most significant.

WHO ARE YOU AND WHERE DID YOU MEET?

My own love story started by the water, sitting together at Woolwich pier we watched the sunset over the harbour and talked for so long - delving deep into each other's souls. It was the scene of our first kiss and that place has stayed with us over the years - a moment of happiness rekindled whenever we stroll down that way.

When it came to choosing our own wedding venue we were drawn once more to the water's edge. We exchanged our vows on the jetty adjacent to the river at Berowra Waters at a restaurant accessible only by the water. It was the perfect choice for us.

You will have your own places and moments that were significant for you: Your first kiss. The moment you knew 'this is the one for me'. The moment your heart just danced. The moment you felt you really connected and were perfectly in sync.

WHAT MOMENTS YOU SHARED IGNITED
YOUR PASSION FOR EACH OTHER?

A marriage is a partnership - a contract signed together in which you declare your intention to share your life with each other.

There will be a common ground between you - a shared set of values that you both agree on that have helped to unite you. You both have your distinct differences but these are the things that you both agree on.

Your relationship so far has also consisted of a set of shared experiences - moments which you have both been present in. Moments of joy. Moments of sorrow. Moments of inspiration. Moments of exhaustion. Moments of wonder. Through the good times and the bad times you have found a path together to follow.

The experiences you've shared have shaped your personal love story.

WHAT EXPERIENCES AND VALUES HAVE YOU SHARED TOGETHER?

My husband and I were always at our happiest travelling together on a road trip in the car, watching the scenery slide by and taking all the back roads. We'd stop for a long lunch, somewhere with a view and good food and wine.

Your happy place may be a physical location or maybe it something more abstract - an emotional place where you are both in sync and able to just enjoy the moment. It may be walking barefoot through the sand at sunset or it could be dancing all night long until you collapse breathless. Maybe it is as simple as sitting on the couch watching movies together or cooking a meal together in the kitchen.

Think of all those moments when you have felt most in love and most in sync with each other and try to track the common denominator between them.

WHERE ARE YOU BOTH AT YOUR HAPPIEST?

We all have a style, a set of preferences for colour, design and atmosphere that we love.

Do you love a little glitz and glamour or perhaps you are down-to-earth with a relaxed and casual vibe? Your style could be associated with the bright lights and high energy of the city or maybe you prefer something more vintage and rural?

There are particular textures or attitudes that we admire and certain things that we constantly gravitate towards - all of these little elements combine to create our unique "style". In planning the style of your wedding you should think about both your individual style preferences as well as your shared overlapping choices. Think about the kind of places you like to spend time in and the decor you choose for your own personal spaces. All of these elements will give you clues as to what your style is.

OUR STYLE IS...

Sometimes it can seem like your wedding is supposed to be a giant checklist of things you “should” do. In reality your wedding should be more about what you “want” to do. Instead of pulling out a checklist from a planning guideline I recommend starting by writing down what is important to you, the elements you are most looking forward to and plan your wedding around that. Is it the food, the cake, the music, the fireworks or “the dress”? How do you want to feel? Should there be lots of laughter or tears of gratitude or just lots of kissing and quiet moments between the two of you?

Create your own checklist of wedding essentials and build your event around those and feel free to discard those things that don’t inspire you. This is your wedding day and should be about celebrating you as a couple first and foremost and your unique love story.
